Jama Masjid

We will visit one of the largest mosques in the world. It was built by Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan, the builder of Taj Mahal. After the construction of the monument in 1656, it remained the royal mosque of the emperors until the end of the Mughal period.

Chandni Chowk

Chandni Chowk is a great place for the feel of the medieval bazaars of India! It was built by the Mughal emperor Shah Jahan as part of his new capital Shahjahanabad. Today it is the largest wholesale market in Asia. This market is also famous for affordable fashion covering daily-wear sarees to bridal sarees, suits and lehengas. We will visit the famous spice market in Old Delhi. There are fantastic food streets as well to stimulate the taste buds.

Red Fort

This 17th century Fort of the Mughal Kings reflects the zenith of creativity prevalent in architecture during the Mughal Era. The Red Fort is a fusion of Indian, Persian and European Art. It is also famous for being the venue of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru's "Freedom at Mid Night" speech on 15th Aug 1947 after India's Independence.

Khari Baoli

Khari Baoli used to be a salt water step well in the 17th century. Today it is Asia's largest spice market. It is a great place to shop for chili, nuts, unrefined spices, grains, unrefined pink salt, black salt, pulses, rice, herbs, and dry fruits.

Dariba Khan

Set up by Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan, Dariba Khan in Persian means 'big unparalleled pearl'. It is a great market for gems and jewelry. Today it is famous for its bridal collection and antique jewelry.
